Was launched in Japan in 2004, and later was launched internationally in 2005. It is an improved version of Pok      Ruby and Sapphire and is the final game of the third generation of the VideoGame S      Mon. The gameplay and the controls are mainly unchanged from previous games of Series; Players control a Pokan coach from a perspective overload. As with Ruby and Sapphire, the general goal of the player is to cross the region of Hoenn and conquer a Series of eight Pok      Mon, in order to challenge the elite four and his champion, While the main sub-cell is to defeat two criminal organizations that try to take advantage of a legendary power Pok      Mon for its own goals. Along with Pok     , which debuted in Ruby and Sapphire, the game incorporates Pok      Mon Gold and Silver not presented in Ruby and Sapphire. The emerald reception was generally positive after the release. Gameplay also see: Pok      Mon and Pok      Mon Ruby and Sapphire A   Gameplay The gameplay in Emerald is largely from the same as in Ruby and Sapphire. Much of the game occurs in an overload style; The characters of the players can move in four directions and can talk to other people worldwide. Players can find wild pok      monoating the grass, sailing on their Pok      Mon, walking through caves and other means. They can also fight against other coaches Pok      Mon. When this happens, the game changes to a battle screen where players and their Pok      is seen on the left front of the screen, while opponents are seen on the back. Statums of Pok      Mon and their coaches are shown on the side of each participant; These statues include the levels of Pok      mon, number of poker coaches (from one to six), the health of the Pok      mon, and any effect of status, as poison, paralysis or burn. Coaches send the first Pok      Mon at your party and they take turns attacking where the first strike is         
