Parents, teachers and students benefit. Not only students are receiving a fun extracurricular activity to fill their time, but also learning something that can benefit from them in the next years. You focus on the needs of teachers by addressing them with your program. "Any business who wants to deal with [schools] has to think about making teachers' lives," she says. Although your program can not directly meet the needs of the teachers' classroom, probably benefit teachers, students and parents indirectly, filling in the gaps in the public education. A child who can dance, speak another language or present in front of a group is more likely to feel confident in the classroom and this may be a good thing for everyone involved. If there is no space for your program during the regular school day, you can provide programs after school so that students get the benefits of their program while gaining supervision they need if they work. If you have your own installation, you can even transport the students of the school to their location every day. Considering that a 2000 education department reported that more than 28 millions of Famãias so far from home, it is clear that the quality of care after the school is a obligation. The Famãlia of this executive director does not work for her work, but she does not stop fighting for the under -reported creativity of the creators means productivity. Here is 3 practices that increase both.
