Casts and splints are orthopic devices that are used â € â € â € œ to protect and support broken bones and joints or wounds. They help immobilize the injured member to keep the bone in place until he heals completely. Sets differ from splints because they provide more support and protection for a member that is injured or broken. They are made of materials such as plaster or fiberglass that can be easily shaped into the shape of the arm or injured leg. Splints, also known as medium releases, provide less support than molds, but are more fast and feast to use. They can also be tight or released easily if swelling in the arm or the leg increases or decreases. Splints ready or off-the-shelves are available in many different sizes and shapes. In some cases, custom splints should be used. Velcro belts facilitate the patient or the health provider to place the splint or take it. When are you templates and splints used?
